

How the Rainbow Was Made

Long ago, there were no rainbows in the world. The sky was blue, the clouds were white, and the grass was green. But there were no colors in the sky after the rain.

One day, the animals had an idea. 'Let's make something beautiful in the sky,' said the fox.

The birds, the deer, the rabbits, and all the other animals agreed. They wanted to bring joy to everyone.

The bluebird brought blue. The red fox brought red. The golden eagle brought yellow. The green frog brought green. The purple butterfly brought purple. And the orange tiger brought orange.

Each animal carried its color to the top of the tallest mountain.

Together, they threw the colors into the sky. The colors stretched across the clouds in a beautiful arc.

When the rain came again, the animals looked up. There, shining across the sky, was the very first rainbow.

The people saw it too and smiled. They felt happy and full of hope.

From that day on, every time it rains and the sun shines, a rainbow appears. It reminds everyone of the day the animals worked together to create something beautiful for all to see.
